Williams Arbizú Luna

Williams is a senior associate at Mayora IP, with two decades of legal experience across corporate/commercial law, intellectual property, and litigation. He joined Mayora IP in 2025 and is a key member of its highly-regarded contentious and litigation team.

Williams' career to date includes private practice experience and an in-house role at a multinational energy and gas company, where he managed the full lifecycle of business operations, including structuring and closing transactions and negotiating complex agreements. This international perspective and depth of commercial insight translates seamlessly to IP, where understanding the strategic and economic value of IP rights is critical to advising on their legal protection. At Mayora IP, he applies this expertise to align clients' IP portfolios with their broader business objectives.

Williams' practice with Mayora covers litigation in the administrative sphere, IP infringement and anti-counterfeiting including criminal issues, as well as extending to transactional IP matters where his commercial insight is a strong asset. He is also pursuing a Master's in Criminal Procedural Law.
